LOUDON, N.H. -- A search is on in Loudon for a missing Massachusetts man who was last seen a week ago when he was believed to be going to watch that weekend's races.

Some of Brougham's personal belongings were found near New Hampshire Motor Speedway, but so far, there has been no sign of him.

His family said Brougham usually has daily contact with his parents and his siblings, but the last time anyone heard from his was last week, sparking the two day search in the area of NHMS.

"It's just kind of incredible that he has kind of vanished," said his sister, Fran Lofland.

Lofland said her brother left his car and his medications for diabetes and a heart condition at his home in Belchertown, Mass. His family said Brougham is a big NASCAR fan, and there's some information that he may have wanted to go to the races last weekend in Loudon.

"There's several anecdotal pieces of information from people at the track or workers at the track that may have seen him at some point during the day, but we haven't been able to confirm any of these sightings as positive sightings," said Lt. John Wimsatt of the Fish and Game Department.

Brougham's wallet, cell phone and watch were found in the area of the speedway, which led authorities to call in search teams that included eight K-9s and the state police helicopter.

Flyers have been placed around the area, and so far, officials said, there's no reason to suspect foul play.

"Right now, many of our search crews that have been out since this morning are starting to come in," Wimsatt said. "There's been no additional clues located."

"You just don't know," Lofland said. "You don't know if he's laying hurt somewhere, and you have to hold out hope, and we'll remain positive and work with law enforcement until we find a resolution to this."
